Presentation retrospective

As your presentation skills improve, you may find that there are still some things you can do to really polish your finished presentations. A presentation retrospective is a useful tool for post-performance reflection. Simply brainstorm lists of things you can "start" doing (that you haven't up until now), "stop" doing (that aren't working for you) and "continue" doing (that are working really well. Then, put those ideas into practice.

START
Make a list of ideas to start doing in your presentations.
STOP
Make a list of ideas to stop doing in your presentations.

CONTINUE
Make a list of ideas to keep doing in your presentations.
